

Authors are asked to write a letter of appeal and resubmit their application in revised form taking into account reviewers' and grants committee's comments.

In their letter applicants should outline why SAUK should reconsider its decision; what the clinical benefits of the research might be; and any other reasons why the research is important. It should also contain a detailed response to every point raised by the reviewers and the committee.

The revised application should indicate what has been modified.

The appeal will then be reviewed by the grants committee and if it agrees to reconsider the application then it may be reviewed by external experts.

The grants chair will then present the case at the next available trustees meeting for consideration.
